The Next Generation

Many of us work to improve our skills and find success in our life's work.

If we're lucky, after we get a little age on and some years of experience under the belt, we realize we've arrived. At the pinnacle, we look around and down and see the new, younger generation of teachers or lawyers or artists and, if we're generous, try to be a mentor and share wisdom. Perhaps they are following in our footsteps, carrying on a grand tradition. More likely, these Young Turks are finding ways to get business done faster, smarter, more creatively and — dare we say — better than ever before. In this story, men and women who are at the top of their game take a look a little farther down the organizational chart and introduce our readers to young up-and-comers they think will represent the future of their profession or vocation.

REAL ESTATE

Christie Orros, 33, sales associate, Coldwell Banker Hartung & Noblin
► Introduced by Virginia Glass, Realtor, Coldwell Banker Hartung & Noblin

“ Since the beginning of my career 47 years ago, I have tried to maintain a personalized ‘high touch’ with clients while keeping pace with changes that, with the advent of the Internet in the last decade, have come at lightning speed. My image of the ‘next-generation Realtor’ is one who is very tech savvy like my colleague, Christie Orros, who in just seven years has become a member of the Top 1 Percent Club in Production of the Tallahassee Board of Realtors. She takes advantage of all the social media available, is engaged in our community and still manages to grow her business in challenging times.”
